

HELP AND SUPPORT @WILLIAMS

If you or someone you know has experienced any of these types of incidents, a variety of help and support is available.

PRESERVING EVIDENCE

If an assault has happened recently (within the last 5 days), evidence collection is an option. You do not need to report to the police to have evidence collected. Preserving evidence can leave options open for future prosecution. Sexual Assault Survivor Services (SASS), x3000, will arrange transport to local hospitals and support throughout the evidence collection process.

MEDICAL CARE

Even if the harm happened some time ago, there may still be lingering injuries or medical concerns. For medical care, including concerns about HIV or STDs, emergency contraception, or injuries, you can go to the Health Center (x2206). In an emergency, please call 911.

ACCOMMODATIONS

Measures to increase safety and access to support resources are available regardless of whether you decide to make a formal report. For example, students can request changes to housing, class schedules, and other types of accommodations. This includes information and resources about immigration status and financial aid. The College can also put in place no-contact orders.

Restraining orders are court orders that can protect you from further harm or abuse. They are valid anywhere, not just on campus, and are obtained through the District Court. For assistance in obtaining one, call SASS at x3000 or The Elizabeth Freeman Center at 866-401-2425.

Students are able to share information confidentially with certain members of the Williams community. This means that any information shared about sexual violence is reported to the Dean of the College in a way that does not contain any identifying information about the student.

Federal law requires that Williams address sexual violence about which "responsible employees" knew or should have known. Responsible employees will keep information as private as possible, but must report to one of the Title IX Coordinators all relevant details about the alleged sexual misconduct that the person disclosing the incident has shared. A responsible employee reporting an assault to the Title IX Coordinator does NOT require the student who experienced misconduct to participate in College investigation if they do not wish to.
